➔ WAREHOUSING

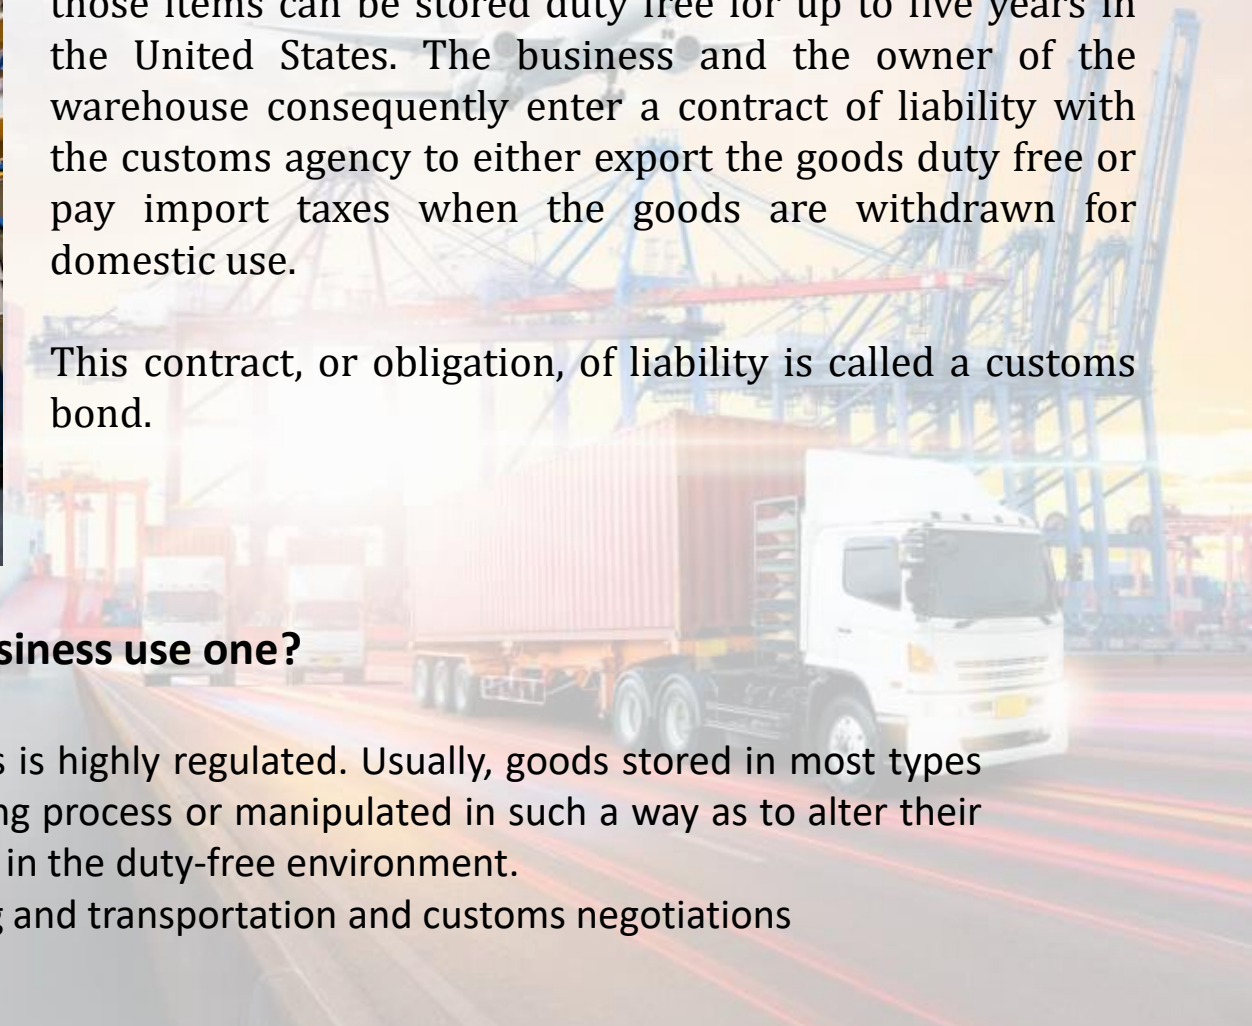

A customs bonded Warehousing, or bonded warehouse, is a secure storage facility that is free from import duties. When a business stores imported goods in a bonded warehouse, those items can be stored duty free for up to five years in the United States. The business and the owner of the warehouse consequently enter a contract of liability with the customs agency to either export the goods duty free or pay import taxes when the goods are withdrawn for domestic use.

This contract, or obligation, of liability is called a customs bond.

What is a customs bonded warehouse and why should my business use one?

While in the bonded warehouse, the manipulation of duty-free goods is highly regulated. Usually, goods stored in most types of bonded warehouses cannot be used in any significant manufacturing process or manipulated in such a way as to alter their material condition. However, they can be cleaned or repackaged while in the duty-free environment.

Bonded warehouses may offer other services, including cargo handling and transportation and customs negotiations
